

If ever there was a case for media ownership caps, Sinclair Broadcast Group's decision to force their stations to air a partisan smear campaign disguised as a documentary proves the case. It even makes a case to further CUT BACK the caps and strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. This decision is not in the public interest.